It's tough. It's been tough. We opened our RE/MAX office in February, and all hell broke loose in March. Our office has been on lockdown virtually since its inception. Not only did we have to adapt, we had to do it quickly. The process isn't even over yet. We're still navigating this new world where developers conduct showings via Zoom, and our realtors deliberately keep their clients at a distance.

We've been hearing of brokers leaving the real estate industry for the allure of easier, quicker cash from e-commerce. We've seen restaurants close down, leaving landlords scrambling for the sudden loss of income.
